SESSIONS & SPEAKERS

21st Century Skills

21st century learners need a skill set capable of meeting the constantly changing demands of modern life. These skills are not only linguistic, but include a range of cognitive and practical tools that will help learners communicate, collaborate and use the resources available to them creatively, critically and effectively. In this session, we will examine: what these skills are; why learners need them; and why they should be of interest to the language teacher.

Steve Lever

The Power of Play

Play allows learners to explore and practice new language in an enjoyable and motivating way. Games create the context for meaningful communication and provide the opportunity for comprehensible input and output. We will discuss how games can lead to acquisition and look at different games using all the language skills- and have some fun along the way.
